BAD ROADS EXPENSIVE.

A cheap and shoddy article of any kind usually turns out to be more expensive and much less satisfactory than the more costly and reliable one. In an article in reference to roads the Washington Post of yesterday says: "Bad roads are extremely expensive—so expensive that the farmers cannot afford to maintain them. The supervisor of roads in the State of New York officially assures the farmers that it costs them half as much to haul their produce three miles by wagon as they pay the railroads to haul it 300 miles. With a system of good macadam roads, he says, the cost of the short haul could be reduced 50 per cent., thus reducing the whole cost of transportation from the farm to the consumer by one-sixth. This, the supervisor figures out, would save the farmers an amount each year equal to the interest on from $10 to $20 an acre, according to the corn raised, and would increase the value of the land, either to sell or to hold, by a like amount."

If these conditions prevail in New York State, what must the cost of transporting produce over the country roads of Virginia, which has the worst highways of any State in the Union. Strange to say the agricultural classes, whom one would naturally expect to be very much interested in this matter, are almost wholly apathetic in regard to it. Let the farmers of Virginia get these facts in their minds and agitate the matter until they secure possible highways, at least. The question is not, can we afford to build roads? but rather, can we afford to maintain poor ones?

It is reported that young Mr. Pullman has gone to work for his living. If this be true the young gentleman deserves a good deal of credit for pursuing such an eminently sensible and proper course. Having been reared in the lap of luxury it is all the more surprising and creditable to him that he should decide at this late hour to make a man of himself. Perhaps the terrible rebuke administered to him and his brother in their father's will has touched his pride. Probably the old gentleman had this in view when he wrote that clause which described the legacy he left for his boys. If this young man has really decided to go to work in an effort to redeem his name the father bequeathed him a richer legacy than the faded wealth of a Croesus, for after all the greatest happiness that can come to a man is in the triumph which crowns a struggle against almost overwhelming odds, or the satisfaction which grows out of the consciousness of duty honestly and patiently performed.

Explanations as to why the battleship Maine was sent to Havana continue to be advanced. The York, Pa., Gazette thinks the vessel was ordered to Cuban waters to pacify Republican jingoism who were likely to break away from the administration.

A Jersey man committed suicide because he failed to secure an appointment as postmaster. He was very foolish. If orthodox views are correct, his Satanic Majesty is as badly overrun with applications for desirable places as is the present Republican administration.

The editor of a comic paper in Berlin has been given two months in prison because his cartoonist caricatured Emperor William. There are times when it doesn't pay to be too funny.

Mr. James J. Corbett would be in his element if he could get himself elected a member of the French chamber of deputies.

Emerson and Longfellow.

In the first number of The Atlantic Monthly 40 years ago Ralph Waldo Emerson had a poem called "Cerberus," which puzzled both critics and common readers. It was said it was the ravest, one of the century. Some said it was nonsense. The first verse ran as follows:

If the poet says or thinks he says,
Or if the slugs think he is slugs,
They know not well the subtle ways
I keep and pass and turn and turn.

That winter it happened that a relative of the poet Longfellow, living in another state, bought a sleigh, and in a family letter to the cousins in Cambridge there was a wall last the January, thus which had followed the purchase should keep them from enjoying the gay cutter that season. When the letter was answered, Longfellow contributed this verse, which, it is said, has never been printed before:

TO—ON THE PURCHASE OF A SLEIGH.
If the sleigher think he sleighs,
Or if the sleigh think it is sleighs,
They know not well the subtle ways
Of snow, that comes and goes again.

—Buffalo Commercial.

Wanted a Lot of Them.

The Chicago Chronicle told of a "new rich" woman who has been giving lavish entertainments, and has endeavored to have them as correct as possible. Her ambition is not to be outdone by anybody. That is the reason she felt envious the other evening when she heard that a certain woman had given a dinner and that the toes were served in the rotunda. Forth with she invited people to a dinner, and hastening to her enter said: "I suppose you have some nice rotundas, haven't you? It is quite the thing now to have legs served in them. Please see that my legs for Wednesday night are served in little rotundas."
